Course description and objective:

This graduate seminar will consider recent and innovative work that examines gender, culture, and politics in Latin America and the Caribbean. We will draw on literature from gender and cultural studies, anthropology, history, and other fields in order to consider changing political economies and cultures on the one hand and lived experiences of those of different gender, race, class, and sexual identities on the other hand. We will read about and discuss contemporary popular culture, everyday life, tourism, development, social movements, and globalization. The class will have a discussion format in which students participate actively. We will have occasional guest speakers and videos and students will be encouraged to attend occasional events outside class.

Course books, available at Wild Iris Bookstore, 802 W. University Avenue:

Course requirements and policies:

Participation

Because the course meets just once each week, full attendance in all classes is essential. Students are expected to come to class having done the reading and ready to participate in discussion. Everyone will have an opportunity to play a part in facilitating the weekly discussion. Brief two-page précis of the week’s reading will be collected during class periods to ensure that all have given thoughtful attention to the reading. Each student is allowed to skip two submissions of précis. [50% of course grade]

Paper

There will be a course paper of approximately 18-20pp based on additional reading, due at the end of the semester. I will expect to receive proposals for these papers by mid-October, including short bibliographies of material to be used and referenced. These papers may focus on a single ethnographic work to be examined closely or they may draw on multiple works on a specific topic of relevance to the course. Everyone will have an opportunity to give an oral presentation of their subject matter during the final weeks of the semester. [50% of course grade]

Academic Honesty

The University of Florida’s honor code requires all students to be honest in their academic work. University policies on cheating, plagiarism, and related issues are available at: http://www.dso.ufl.edu/judicial/procedures/academicguide.html

Accommodations

Students requesting classroom accommodation must first register with the Dean of Students Office. The Dean of Students Office will provide documentation to the student who must then provide this documentation to me when requesting accommodation.
